What Economic Factors Caused The Stock Market Crash of 1929? And could it been prevented ?

During the 1920s, the United States experienced economic growth that not only made the country richer, but also allowed people to have more luxuries like cars, jewelry, assets, and houses. At that time it was common for people to have things of great value and even more valuable than anything else. but on October 29, 1929, the stock market suffered a setback and not only affected millions of Americans, it also affected the global economy.
