destructive effects of the trauma more "nervous breakdowns" than any other group. More likely than anyone else (15 percent) made a suicide attempt.

The estimate of actual suicide is controversial. Popular media accounts of more deaths of Vietnam veterans in combat. These accounts are contradicted by studies nevertheless suggest a higher risk of suicide.⁷¹ Hendin and others found that veterans with post-traumatic stress disorder made suicide attempts (15 percent) and suicide (15 percent). Most of these veterans had heavy combat exposure, and their wartime experience, including combat exposure, and post-traumatic stress disorder during the course of the war.

Thus, the very "trauma" moment may pursue the individual, wonder that Freud found the force at work.⁷² The trauma lives on in the dialectic of the individual.
