Assemble final written report (Approximately 1000–1500 words)

Before you sit down to write your paper, you may first want to spend some time pondering what you think we can learn sociologically about our local community -- and the way it is impacted by globalization -- from this comparison of these different grocery in our region.

Your report should begin with a summary section where you describe what you observed and identify the ways that the two food markets are both similar and different from one another. In the next section you should interpret your observations and try to link your observations to relevant sociological concepts that we have learned about throughout the course.

Your final report should be labeled and organized in the following format:

Summary: Describe each location referencing the guiding questions provided. Limit this section to observable phenomena – things that you can see. For each location include a description of the surrounding neighborhood, providing information about the social context of each store.

Interpretation: In this section, apply any sociological concepts that help you make sense of your observations. Each time you reference a sociological concept (like, for example, cultural hybrids), italicize that term in the text. How were your observations different from your initial predictions in Step #1?

Conclusions: As a result of these observations, what you can say about globalization in our metropolitan region?

Make sure that your paper cites the sources you use accurately using ASA citation format, as described in this
